Manager's Market Review and Outlook

Market Commentary

US

As the number of new cases of Covid-19 declined and vaccination penetration increased, the US economy enjoyed a bounce in activity in February. After having languished around the turn of the year, payrolls surged, led by hiring in the leisure and hospitality industry. The unemployment rate ticked down to 6.2%, but remains a long way away from full-employment. Consumer spending in the current quarter looks on track to rebound as well. Combined with robust business and housing investment, overall GDP growth in the first quarter is expected to be impressive. Price inflation was solid at the beginning of the year and base effects will flatter the year-over-year figures in the Spring. However, inflation is still well short of the Federal Reserve's goal that it exceeds 2% for some time. Finally, the biggest macroeconomic news is the swift movement toward passage of President Biden's $1.9 trillion American Rescue Plan. Combined with the prior stimulus packages, the sum total of fiscal spending since the start of the coronavirus pandemic is the largest in history apart from World War II.

UK

The UK remains under a strict lockdown with the past month seeing the government finally unveil its roadmap for returning to normality. Restrictions are scheduled to be lifted in stages, spaced five weeks apart and culminating in the removal of all social distancing measures in late June. To date, 22 million people have received at least one dose of either the Pfizer or AstraZeneca vaccine, putting the UK ahead of all other major, developed economies. The Chancellor unveiled his long awaited budget in the first week of March; fiscal support is to remain elevated this year, but set to tighten in the years ahead as the Treasury seeks to make government borrowing more sustainable. Relations with the EU deteriorated in the last week with the UK unilaterally extending the grace period on some imports into Northern Ireland; the European Commission responded by initiating legal action and the European Parliament has shelved ratification of the trade deal negotiated at the end of last year.

EMU

EMU GDP contracted -0.6% q/q in Q4 2020, albeit by less than the ECB forecast of -2.2%, though emerging hard data (e.g., Ger Jan retail sales: -5.8% m/m; Ger Jan IP -2.5% m/m) point to a deeper contraction in Q1 2021 than the initial ECB December forecast. The EMU Composite PMI rose 1pt in February but remains weak at 48.8, with the Services PMI (45.7) particularly affected by ongoing coronavirus lockdown restrictions. Meanwhile, EMU coronavirus daily cases are rising again and the relatively slow pace of vaccination rollout remains a risk going forward, with the EMU lagging behind the US and UK. EMU Core inflation eased from 1.4% to 1.1% y/y in February, the beginning of an unwind of one-off factors that boosted inflation in January, while underlying inflation remains low. The ECB's Panetta warned that yield curve steepening is unwelcome and must be resisted, and that the ECB should not hesitate to increase the volume of PEPP purchases and spend the entire PEPP envelope or more if needed.

Japan

Even though expectations for the Bank of Japan's ("BoJ") March policy review were ratcheting down, most analysts still had expected that it would still be meaningful. Chair Kuroda, however, appears to have lowered expectations even further. Asked in a Diet session, he said that he is not considering widening the margin in which the BoJ allows long-term JGB rates to fluctuate. The BoJ could still tinker with its ETF purchase program, though even those have been running at a relatively slow rate the last few months.
